I just bought a used 2011 Hyundai Accent sedan like 2 weeks ago and it only has like 35,000 miles on it. I took it to get its routine service today (oil change) and they marked on the form that I need a transmission fluid flush and that it would cost like $217. Just like engine oil and filter, the transmission oil and filter in the Hyundai Accent requires a change at the car manufacturer suggested intervals. Changing the oil gets rid of very small particles that accumulate over time, clog the filter and cause transmission parts to prematurely wear. SOURCE: 2001 Hyundai Accent - Automatic Transmission fluid It is a proprietary Hyundai transmission fluid. Don't use anything other than the Hyundai stuff. This fluid has superb lubrication properties, but it breaks down much quicker than the specified 30,000 mile fluid change intervals. An AT drain and fill only changes a portion of the ATF, whereas you can change all the fluid on a MT. To change all the fluid in an AT, you need a transmission flush, but that's a whole different thing (and somewhat controversial, or not, depending on who you talk to). Of course, we're a forum of enthusiasts so many of us, myself included, go ...
